

MAKE YOUR CAMPUS DISASTER-READY WITH AN EMERGENCY RESPONSE PLAN

TIME IS NOT YOUR FRIEND

When property damage strikes, a response is needed immediately. Any hesitation results in a larger, more complex loss. More often than not, we see campus properties struggle to operate as restoration teams work to help restore the spaces they need to educate and continue campus life. The reaction to property damage needs to be immediate, organized, planned, and you need to have your partners vetted ahead of disaster.

TIME CAN BE A TOOL

An immediate reaction to property damage requires some knowledge of what your campus properties are up against. Water damage, fire damage, mold, and natural disasters are all threats that most buildings face at some point. Connecting with your restoration partner to discuss how these events can impact your campus will kickstart the creation of your Emergency Response Plan (ERP).

LEARN, PREPARE, AND REACT WITH AN EMERGENCY RESPONSE PLAN

Partnering with a restoration team to build an ERP puts the focus on prevention. By understanding what you're up against, and training to manage it, you will find that responding to a crisis is second nature.

When building an ERP, you will work to design a predefined plan for your facilities and the restoration company. Together, you will compile the contact information of key personnel, sync all parties with your insurance provider, and train on and off-site teams on how to react in a crisis. This will become your roadmap to recover from a disaster faster, safer, and more effectively.

THE RIGHT PARTNERSHIP MEANS LESS WORK FOR YOU

With a strong knowledge of what your campus facilities are up against, it's the responsibility of your restoration provider to guide you. An ERP is an ongoing process that needs to be redefined and adapted as elements like building age and weather patterns continue to change. Lean on your restoration partner to support you. Know that when disaster strikes, your on-site teams will react appropriately, and your restoration partner will respond with the efficiency you need to reduce downtime on campus and recover your properties fast.

In an emergency we are here to help, 24/7, 365 days a year.
